As for 1-6 questions, choose the right answer A, B, C or D. Six months ago I made a rash promise. The youth club manager in our village called me in March, saying: We are thinking about children's playgrounds in October at half-time. Would you be willing to help? My answer was of course, why not? In fact, I was a little flattered to be asked, although working as a care assistant with the elderly hardly qualified me for the role. Still, I duly put the date in my diary, and of course I forgot all about it. I don't know if you've noticed, but time is a habit of speeding together faster than a police car chasing a robber and before I knew that day was dawning. I arrived at the youth center that morning feeling full of trembling. There was a gang of 12 assistants, including me and each couple was assigned to a special age group. Mine was 10 to 11 years of age. Even with the planning meeting I had attended the week before, I worried about whether I was up to the task. Why had N't I read the rich lesson plans before? And wasn't the average 10-year-old more interested in the latest Play Station game than making things with paper and glue? Too soon the children began to arrive. The look of relief on the parents' faces as they handed their offspring over to us was quite comical. A handful of children were already members of the club, while the other forty-five were from local primary schools. Again I ask myself why I was elected to spend the day with all these little monsters, especially if I have two all my fight with I don't have to worry, of course, because it turned out to be a wonderful day. We watched entertainment dvd clips, learned action songs in clay pyramids, decorated cookies, played memory games and spent some time quietly contemplating. I say we, because I rediscovered my inner child and joined all the activities. The particular highlight for me was the final rendition he got the whole world in his hands in the final part of the day. The children knew the words and actions of the heart and sang so loud it was almost to nod the roof. It is difficult to explain these moments: just that the tingling of the body is joyful to have experienced something so magical. Of course, there were also moments of great poignancy. I had a hard time thinking about one girl who mentioned oh-so-casually that her mom was in the hospital and would be there for a long time. It is easy for us adults to idealise childhood and forget that some children have their own burden of anxiety and anxiety. When I got home completely exhausted, still with modeling clay under my nails, I thought about what a privilege it was. There was one disappointment for the kids, and it was that the playscheme was only running for one day instead of the whole week. As I said goodbye to my group, one of the children turned around and said, Can we do it again on the next holiday, Miss? My answer was: Of course, why not? 1) When the first day of work arrived the writer was surprised that the day had come to a turn so quickly, because she'd forget to write down a date, because she witnessed a car chase on her way, that she woke up at dawn. 2) When the writer came to start her work she put the children in pairs, that she should have done more preparation, felt confident that she could cope with the ages of 10 and 11, saw the kids had brought their electronic games to play with. 3) According to the writer, parents were happy to stay with their children all day, worried about children from other schools, that their children might not behave themselves, happy to leave their children. 4) The writer's best moment took place in the middle of the day, took him by surprise, difficult to put into words, was when the day was over. 5) According to the writer, adults think that being a child is a privilege, sometimes forget that children are concerned too, are usually exhausted when weathing their children, no stressful life. 6) What is the writer's attitude until the end of the day? She could imagine doing the job again next time. She was sad to say a good bye to children. She was disappointed with the experience. he hopes that the playscheme will last longer in the future.
